In times of coronavirus, how women domestic workers are coping with work and fear

For millions of domestic workers across the country, it's work as usual despite the fear of COVID-19. But considerate employers, constant awareness, and access to hand sanitisers and masks are helping allay some of their fears.

"Sasirekha works at five different houses, as a cook and domestic help. I ask her whether she knows about the coronavirus and she's blank". She also doesn't know what a hand sanitiser is. I proceed to give her a general overview of the situation and offer her a bottle of sanitiser. She is alarmed by the information at first, but nods in agreement and promises to be careful. We should take the initiative in giving information to such peoples they are at major risk themselves and can become a carrier for the deadly Covid 19 Coronavirus.

In these stressful and uncertain times, we have been urged to take care of one another through acts of human kindness and concern for our friends, family and those putting their lives on the line to keep us safe. Instead, some are prepping to kill.

These gun owners say they fear unrest. The irony is that they are the ones the rest of us have to be afraid of.
